

DOCTOR WHO

starring Tony Garner and introducing Jon Pertwee

DEVIOUS

by David Clarke and Ashley Nealfuller

When naive Gallifreyan Callisto recruits Auriga a renegade Time Lord into a scheme allowing the famous 'Doctor' to compete in a test of non-interference you know full well it's going to lead to tears before bedtime. With the daleks as 'willing' servants it seems universal domination etc etc is finally within Auriga's grasp. Oh yeah?

Naturally the Doctor sees through this scheme but not before realising he himself is a total fake. He's an interim, a half-completed incarnation of the Doctor. Auriga offers him a way to be 'the real Doctor' but that all goes pear-shaped as well.

Oh dear - it's not a good day for Auriga. Just as things seem to get sorted something truly 12 feet high gets beamed in at the last minute and nothing can save him. And the Doctor is no better off either.

So conveniently the Time Lords intervene and sort things out, allowing some useful cameo performances from some fine actors who were bribed into taking part. Even the venerable Jon Pertwee makes an appearance on his way to a talk and manages to fall out of the TARDIS again some 25 years after he did it the first time.

And speaking of total fakes, so is this cover. It's been produced so you can download it and put it over the proper War Games cover just for the sheer bravado. As if you have nothing better to do. [Ask a grown-up if you are going to use scissors.]

So as you may have gathered you're not going to see the whole story after all. Or much of our brilliant acting, sets and props - except the bit with Jon Pertwee in and that funny bloke who thinks he's the Doctor.

I mean, good grief, there's only flippin' 12 minutes of ancient 'Devious' footage on the DVD anyway. And then it's on disc three, so at least you'll get to watch 10 episodes of really excellent proper Doctor Who first. By which time you've completely forgotten about 'Devious'...

...Or that pizza you'd put in the oven before episode one. Hello Officer.
